There's a settlement that happened this week that could effect many Playstation Vita owners out there, based on some misleading advertising from the system. What do us in studio as well as our listeners think about this news? Was it expected? Was it justified?

Comments from the UK this week start off our show with chatter about a possible second "golden age" for gaming. Are we in a golden age of gaming right now, or is this soley a testement to indie game development in recent years? Our hosts and participants chime in.

Also in the news:

* Nintendo patents Gameboy Emulator

* Ubisoft Assassin's Creed apology

* Call of Duty Exploit Videos being DMCA'ed

* No early review copies for "The Crew"
